

Obama to be greeted by anti-fracking protesters this week

by Karen DeWitt, in Albany, NY

Listen to this story

Aug 19, 2013 — President Obama is planning to visit upstate New York this week to promote an education plan. But whenever a major politician visits the region, the issue of fracking is often on the agenda, whether they want it or not.

President Obama's planned trip to Buffalo, Syracuse and Binghamton will focus on the importance of getting an affordable college education.

But activists opposed to hydro fracking want the topic of natural gas drilling to be on the agenda as well.

"We're going to be present in Binghamton by the hundreds if not the thousands," says Walter Hang, with the Ithaca based Toxics Targeting.

Hang says protesters are expected at the President's other stops, as well, but the Southern Tier, which is at the epicenter of the gas drilling debate, will feature the largest demonstration.

"It would be irresponsible to permit shale fracking anywhere in New York without comprehensive public health protections or liability standards," Hang said.

Another anti fracking group, Frack Action, is calling for volunteers to attend the protests on its Facebook page.

A 2012 anti-fracking protest in the Capitol in Albany. Photo: Karen DeWitt

NCPR is supported by:

This is a Visitor-Supported website.

Give now. Win an iPad.

But hurry! Our drawing will be held on September 1st - click to enter!

Without your donations, this just couldn't be NCPR.org.

Hear this

Listen with NCPR Player

Download audio

Share this

Facebook Twitter

Tumblr Email

Related Stories

Regional Headlines

Why did black leaders support America's drug war for so long?

Charles Rangel: America's "front-line"

While Mr. Obama is pro fracking, and has promoted gas drilling in his State of the Union message, many New York politicians oppose fracking, and the state has had a defacto five year moratorium on drilling.

Governor Cuomo has said he's neutral on the issue, but his Health Commissioner has been delaying the release of a health study for nearly a year.

Karen Moreau, with the Petroleum Institute, says Governor Cuomo should listen to President Obama on the issue. And she says there's a connection between achieving good education and strengthening the middle class, which the President will speak about, and advancing fracking in economically troubled upstate regions.

"That's very, very relevant," said Moreau, who says the jobs created by the gas drilling industry are "high paying jobs" in the vocational trades. She says welders, who are in short supply in neighboring Pennsylvania where fracking is prevalent, are making up to $6000 a week.

President Obama is also stopping in Northeast Pennsylvania, and Moreau predicts he will see a big difference in the two state's economic status.

"In Pennsylvania, what they would see is an area that was once like Appalachia, with no middle class at all, reborn," Moreau said.

Moreau says in Pennsylvania, many community colleges have developed programs to train skilled workers for the gas drilling industry, who are almost guaranteed good jobs.

Hang concedes there would be jobs created from hydro fracking, but he says they would come at the cost of potentially dangerous pollution, something Moreau denies.

"I'm personally not against natural gas," Hang said. "I'm against pollution."

Governor Cuomo and President Obama may not get to discuss their views of hydro fracking, higher education, or anything at all. Governor Cuomo, in an interview with public TV's New York Now, was asked whether he planned to travel with the President. His answer was non committal.

"It's always a delight to see him," Cuomo said. "However I can help, I'd like to help, but it's always a pleasure to see him."

If Cuomo does decide to accompany the President, Hang, with Toxics Targeting, says the demonstrators will also direct their anti fracking message to Governor Cuomo. Hang says they will give Cuomo a preview what he says the governor's 2014 re election campaign could look like, with protesters at every stop.

Even if Cuomo skips the trip with the President, anti fracking groups are already planning an event at the State Fair on Thursday, for Governor's Day where Cuomo has regularly appeared in the past.

As for when New York State will decide whether or not to frack, Cuomo has said there is no timetable, and that he's still waiting for the completion of the health study.

Tumblr Email

Like 6

3 Comments

Explore this

Reported by

Karen DeWitt

NYS Capitol
Correspondent
@kdewitt7

Tags

obama · education · environment
· hydrofracking · syracuse

America's front line general" in the drug war

Monday's news briefs from the Associated Press

A facelift in the late-summer perennial garden

Massena takes Alcoa cutback in stride

Ethics commission weighs transparency, politics and safety in donor disclosure

Research vessel gives Lake Erie a check-up

George Davis learns community from life in Essex

Book review: "The River's Tale"

Friday's news briefs from the Associated Press